

I think we need more competition, not less. And this nonsense of giving cable providers territories needs to stop. We the people are not to be divided among the companies we are forced to go to these days to get TV (it was free until Obama).

With competition and no price collusion we should get better service (Time Warner stinks) and lower prices. There's no reason for these high prices - except to provide billions each and every year to the provider companies.

And remember when cable industry was looking for our approval? Long time ago now. Their promise was no commercials if you paid for their service. Now there's at least 3.5 minutes of commercials every 10 - 15 minutes. Cable stations need to decide whether they want to be on cable stations or networks - and cable should mean no commercials.

Also, the internet is supposed to belong to we the people - we paid for its development with taxpayer dollars - why, pray tell, am I paying through the nose for access.
